

Sensitive Hemorrhoids: Cauterization for Hemorrhoid

One who has piles (a.k.a. hemorrhoids) no longer has to suffer because there are many available treatments. One could consult a physician for prescription drugs. Non-surgical procedures like sclerotherapy and surgical procedures such as hemorrhoidectomy are also available. Despite the advancements in technology, cauterization remains to be one of the top selections for mild cases. It is an old technique but with its performance, it should not surprise you when doctors still recommend cauterization for hemorrhoid these days.

Cauterization and Coagulation

If you have looked up non-surgical treatments, you must have already read about heat coagulation.

The process is similar to cauterization but it actually gets rid of the tissue. Cauterizing the cells will be much better because the process does not harm the protein structures.

Pros and Cons of Cauterization

For piles, cauterization has advantages and disadvantages, just like with any other form of treatment. It can be a good option because it is not as expensive and time-consuming as surgical procedures. It can also be done as an outpatient procedure. It is also more convenient for patients as there is no lengthy recovery time given that there is no skin cutting to be done. Most importantly, hemorrhaging may be permanently cured since cauterizing often lead to sealing the particular veins. These are simply some of the reasons why cauterizing hemorrhoids has never been eliminated from the list of treatments.

- To conduct cauterization for hemorrhoid, electric current is allowed to pass through the tip of the cable.
- It will heat up.
- It can then be run over the affected tissue, which will burn considering the heat in the wire.
- The tissue will likely then degrade.

Hemorrhoids: Briefly Explained

A hemorrhoid is a vascular structure that helps in the bowel movement. Occasionally, the tissue that makes up this structure gets blocked making them swell and bleed. The swollen tissues are called piles but many people also refer to them as hemorrhoids. The situation can affect the anus, which is the last four centimeters that stool has to pass through. Some hemorrhoids may also occur in the lower rectum, which is connected to the anus.
